

Friday, 28 April 2023

Private Sector Credit

Are Arrivals Clouding the Housing Story?

- The underlying slowing in private sector credit growth continued in March. Credit expanded 0.3% in March, down from the growth of 0.4% recorded in January and February. Over the year to March, credit grew by 6.8% – the slowest annual pace in 15 months.
- Monthly housing credit growth also eased, growing by 0.3% over March, slightly down from the 0.34% recorded in February. The underlying trend for housing credit growth continues to soften. Over the three months to March, housing credit averaged 0.3% per month, this is half the average growth rate of 0.6% recorded in the corresponding quarter just a year ago.
- National dwelling prices have stabilised and even increased by 0.6% over the month of March, after a virtually flat reading in February. At face value, housing credit growth appears to contradict the stabilisation in prices. In March, growth in owner-occupier credit ticked down, while we did see a partial offset through a tick up in investor housing credit – investors could be responding to higher expected yields from higher rents and strong demand for rental housing.
- If housing credit growth is easing, what’s driving the pickup in demand to support the stabilisation in house prices? Reports suggests that some foreigners have skipped the rental queue and have purchased instead – Census data suggest that in the past it would typically take a migrant 4-7 years to buy a dwelling. There could also be cashed up investors getting into the market, speculating that prices have bottomed out from here.
- This has implications for the RBA – foreigners and cashed up buyers may be less sensitive to changes in domestic interest rates. Further, listings and volumes of property exchanged remain low. This therefore suggests that changes in house prices may not necessarily be a great gauge on how restrictive monetary policy is.

Business

Business credit expanded 0.4% in the month. This was a step down from the 0.6% rise recorded in February. Over the year to February, business credit grew by 10.6% – the slowest pace since March 2022.

While business credit growth has slowed due to higher rates and slowing demand, elevated capacity utilisation and generous tax incentives are providing some support.

Other personal

Other personal credit, which includes credit cards and personal loans, declined 0.3% in March. Other personal credit has declined for six of the past 12 months and was flat over the year to March.

Pat Bustamante, Senior Economist

Ph: +61 468 573 786

Contact Listing

Chief Economist

Besa Deda
dedab@bankofmelbourne.com.au
+61 404 844 817

Senior Economist

Jarek Kowcza
jarek.kowcza@bankofmelbourne.com.au
+61 481 476 436

Senior Economist

Pat Bustamante
pat.bustamante@bankofmelbourne.com.au
+61 468 571 786

Economist

Jameson Coombs
jameson.coombs@bankofmelbourne.com.au
+61 401 102 789

The Detail

The information contained in this report ("the Information") is provided for, and is only to be used by, persons in Australia. The information may not comply with the laws of another jurisdiction. The Information is general in nature and does not take into account the particular investment objectives or financial situation of any potential reader. It does not constitute, and should not be relied on as, financial or investment advice or recommendations (expressed or implied) and is not an invitation to take up securities or other financial products or services. No decision should be made on the basis of the Information without first seeking expert financial advice. For persons with whom Bank of Melbourne has a contract to supply Information, the supply of the Information is made under that contract and Bank of Melbourne's agreed terms of supply apply. Bank of Melbourne does not represent or guarantee that the Information is accurate or free from errors or omissions and Bank of Melbourne disclaims any duty of care in relation to the Information and liability for any reliance on investment decisions made using the Information. The Information is subject to change. Terms, conditions and any fees apply to Bank of Melbourne products and details are available. Bank of Melbourne or its officers, agents or employees (including persons involved in preparation of the Information) may have financial interests in the markets discussed in the Information. Bank of Melbourne owns copyright in the information unless otherwise indicated. The Information should not be reproduced, distributed, linked or transmitted without the written consent of Bank of Melbourne.

Any unauthorised use or dissemination is prohibited. Neither Bank of Melbourne- A Division of Westpac Banking Corporation ABN 33 007 457 141 AFSL 233714 ACL 233714, nor any of Westpac's subsidiaries or affiliates shall be liable for the message if altered, changed or falsified.